 270 This agency began as an authority under the State Highway Department to explore the feasibility of financing and constructing a river crossing between the States of Delaware and New Jersey in either the form of a bridge or tunnel. In September of 1945 this agency was formally named the Delaware River Crossing Division. In March of 1952, the agency was renamed the Delaware Memorial Bridge Division. In August of 1955, after a department wide reorganization, the agency was renamed the Delaware Intestate Highway Division. In September of 1962, after Federal approval, this agency was succeeded by a bi-state authority, the Delaware River and Bay Authority, which held their initial organizational meeting on February 6, 1963.
