WHEREAS, in 1981 Delaware State College offered its first graduate program, a Master of Arts Degree Program in the field of education and by 1987 eleven Master Degree programs were being offered by the college which include biology, business administration, chemistry, education, physics, and social work; and

WHEREAS, in 1986 the office of Dean of Graduate Studies and Research was established thus creating a distinct administrative structure for graduate education; and

WHEREAS, in 1991-92 academic year, the Division of Academic Affairs was reorganized to house the undergraduate programs in "schools" with each school headed by a senior academic administrator at the rank of Dean. The undergraduate schools are Arts and Sciences, Business and Economics, and Professional Studies. The School of Education will be established in July of 1993; and Physical Education, and Recreation; History and Political Science; Mathematics and Computer Sciences; Music, Philosophy; Physics; Astronomy; Psychology and Sociology; and

WHEREAS, the School of Business and Economics contains the Departments of Economics, Business Administration and Accounting; and

WHEREAS, the School of Professional Studies includes the Departments of Nursing, Social Work, Education, Airway Science, Agricultural and Natural Resources, and Home Economics; and

WHEREAS, more than eighty curriculum options leading to the Bachelor's Degree are offered by twenty-two academic departments; and

WHEREAS, in the fall of 1992 head count enrollment of the college was 2,935, an all time high, with approximately 34% of the undergraduate students majoring in the traditional arts and science disciplines while 66% majored in professional areas; and

WHEREAS, during the past 25 years there has been a steady growth in research at the college, much of which has been in the biomedical sciences, agriculture and natural resources and federal support continues to increase yearly. For the 1992-93 academic year total extramural funding for research and special programs exceeded $4.6 million; and

WHEREAS, Delaware State College has a distinguished faculty that has received numerous national and local awards from professional associations in recognition of their scholarly pursuits; and

WHEREAS, in 1992, the college had a faculty of approximately 166, with 99 holding Doctorate degrees in the various disciplines, and with 27 holding the rank of professor, 43 holding the rank of associate professor; 56 assistant professors; 20 instructors; 1 research professor; 2 assistant research professors; 4 research instructors and 13 visiting faculty; and

WHEREAS, the college has recently completed a major enhancement of its library resources by completing a $5.8 million addition/renovation and by enhancing the use of technology, including the installation of a new library computer and on-line catalog system; and

WHEREAS, the name "university" better reflects what Delaware State College has become over the years; and

WHEREAS, the name change is a recognition of the diversity, depth and quality that Delaware State College has achieved through vision and dedication to its mission; and

WHEREAS, of the 17 historically black land-grant institutions, Delaware State College and Fort Valley State College (in Georgia) are the only institutions that have not been designated universities; and

WHEREAS, of the 161 colleges and universities that belong to the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges, including the 17 historically black institutions, Delaware State College and Fort Valley State College are the only member institutions that have not been designated as universities; and

WHEREAS, the university designation will make it clear to the public that the institution offers a comprehensive array of programs at the bachelors and masters levels in the liberal arts, the sciences and selected professional areas; and

WHEREAS, recruitment of outstanding students and faculty will be enhanced because the institution will not have prospects who hold the popular view that a college is limited in its offerings, thus allowing the institution to better compete with peer institutions for students and faculty; and

WHEREAS, the question of what constitutes a "university" as distinct from a "college" is central to the consideration of a request to rename a college as a university; and

WHEREAS, while there have been many widely used definitions of what constitutes a "university" as distinct from a "college", the truth is that historically there have been no concrete, commonly accepted criteria distinguishing between a university and a college other than the broad public belief that a university is somehow larger, more graduate and research oriented, and features a greater breadth and depth of degree offerings than a college; and

WHEREAS, the most recent and widely accepted classification of higher education institutions is in the 1987 report of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching in which they classify the 3,400 colleges and universities into 10 general categories based upon the level of degrees awarded, the fields in which the degrees are conferred, and, in some categories, enrollments, federal research support, and selectivity of admissions criteria; and

WHEREAS, under the Carnegie classification system, Delaware State College is classified among the comprehensive university and colleges I and it is noteworthy that under the Carnegie classification scheme they make no distinction as to whether a comprehensive institution is called a university or college; and

WHEREAS, under the Carnegie Classification of Comprehensive Universities and Colleges I over seventy—five (75) percent of the public institutions are designated universities; and

WHEREAS, it is the belief of Delaware State College that they can change their name without adversely affecting their standards of quality or the quality of higher education in the State of Delaware; and

WHEREAS, the name change will not change the priorities and mission of Delaware State College; and

WHEREAS, the presence of a readily identified university in central Delaware will serve to make central and southern Delaware even more attractive to new businesses and to potential employees of new and existing businesses, thus permitting Delaware State College to become a resource in economic development; and

WHEREAS, university status is a plus when competing for extramural funding, both private (foundations and corporation funding) and federal, thus allowing Delaware State College to substantially increase its ability to raise funds from external sources.

NOW, THEREFORE:

BE IT ENACTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF DELAWARE:

Section 1. Amend Chapter 65 of Title 14, Delaware Code, by striking the words "Delaware State College" wherever they appear in said Chapter and substituting in lieu thereof the words "Delaware State University" and further amending the Chapter by striking the word "College" wherever it appears throughout the Chapter and substituting in lieu thereof the word "University".
